

The Psychology Department of Cornell University anticipates hiring a tenure-track assistant professor in social or personality psychology beginning July 1, 2014.

Review of applications will begin October 1, 2013. We are particularly interested in applicants with research interests in judgment/decision-making, social cognition, attitudes, emotion, relationships, culture, and stereotyping/prejudice.

Individuals with research expertise in neuroscientific/biological approaches are especially encouraged to apply, including those using fMRI, electrophysiology, neuroendocrinology, transcranial magnetic stimulation, and genetic and epigenetic markers. Applications from women and minority candidates are especially welcome. Cornell University is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer and Educator. Interested applicants should submit a letter of application that includes one or more key words indicating their specific area(s) of specialization, curriculum vitae, research and teaching statement, 3 pdfs of completed research, and letters of recommendation sent directly from three referees to:

<https://academicjobsonline.org/ajo/jobs/2943>

PLEASE POST